Accessing, Organizing, Disseminating Local and Global Knowledge (15th-19th Centuries)

Convened by: Paola Molino (LMU München; Alexander von Humboldt-Stiftung), Guy Burak (New York University Library/Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies Department), Dagmar Riedel (Columbia University), Martina Siebert (Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin/East Asia Department; Independent Scholar)

Participants: Arndt Brendecke (LMU München), Sebastian Conrad (FU Berlin), Islam Dayeh (FU Berlin), Michael Facius (FU Berlin), Francis Richard (CNRS, Paris), Florence Hsia (University of Wisconsin-Madison), Christian Jacob (EHESS, Paris), Seth Kimmel (Columbia University), Joachim Kurtz (Universität Heidelberg), Alberto Cevolini (Università degli Studi di Modena e Reggio Emilia), Christoph Rauch (Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin/Oriental Department), Nilanjan Sarkar (London School of Economics), Emile Schrijver (Universiteit van Amsterdam; Jewish Historical Museum, Amsterdam), Nur Sobers-Khan (British Library), Ronny Vollandt (LMU München)

The explorative workshop explores shifts in the classification of knowledge in the pre-modern world by examining the evolution of finding aids such as catalogs, indices, card files, and bibliographies from a global perspective. Did theories and practices of knowledge classification respond only to concrete local and spatial inputs or were they connected on the global scale? How was the access to knowledge organized and through which media was it accessed (books, summaries, bibliographical dictionaries)?
